THE SMALL-POX SCANDAL IN SAN FRANCISCO.

A physician in San Francisco, widely known and highly esteemed, was taken with small-pox last week. At midnight, after some days of sickness—when the weather was cold and raw, he was taken in a shambles, rough-riding, ill-licensed wagon to the pest-house, where within a few hours after he died. This Altta pronounces "munder," and lays the blame at the door of the Health Department.

The officers of that department did the best they could, probably, and acted in the light they have. It has been the custom to take small-pox patients to the pest-house, which is a scandalous concern, and they but followed the rule of this custom. But the whole city government is to blame. Why is it that a suitable hospital is not provided? That San Francisco now has a disgrace to civilization and a shame to humanity. Why does not the metropolis of the coast provide ambulances of the very best order, with swinging boxes, in which patients may be carried with perfect ease? Why are not ambulances provided that are bedded, heated, air-conditioned, and made perfect in all respects?

Why, indeed, is that cold, tumbling express wagons are used to transport the feverish sick, who should be handled so tenderly and so carefully guarded from cold air?

It is notable that the attempt to remove small-pox patients to the pest-house in San Francisco is being abandoned. Of course, by such abandonment the epidemic will be controlled with far greater difficulty, for sequestration of patients is necessary to prevent the spread of contagious disease.

But the abandonment in San Francisco is the result of the just protest of the people against their loved ones and friends being taken out for treatment to a building not fitted for the purpose. It is "full of draughts," heated only by offensive coal oil stoves, is ill-ventilated, foul as drains, devoid of common comforts, and in every respect unsuited for the housing of those afflicted with small-pox. It is amazing that in a city renowned for its charities, rich to the hundreds of millions, and overflowing with philanthropy, such things can be.

It becomes a terribly serious matter when one brings it home. Let the reader suppose his wife, daughter, son or other member of his household to be stricken with the dread disease; knowing the condition of the public small-pox hospital, that removal to it could be had only in such an "ambulance" as San Francisco provides; that once taken away the care of the afflicted one would be committed wholly to strangers, nurses qualified rather by immunity from the disease than skill and kindness those infested, indeed, to human suffering, and incurable to a great degree of the plights of the victims, because burdened with the care of two hundred patients; would not every instinct of love and man in resistance against the attempt of the health officers to remove the loved one? Would not he act as did Rev. Mr. Merrill in Oakland last week, who warned the officers at their peril to attempt to remove his sister from his home, and on their making the attempt, resisted them forcibly, and appealing to the law brought their claim of authority into such doubt that they have abandoned the effort, and the reverend gentleman not only "holds the fort," but has in his resistance the sympathy of the entire community?

How much better off is Sacramento county than San Francisco in provision for an epidemic? The small-pox hospital is probably a little better structure than that of the metropolis; it is much better situated, but is provision for the care of the sick when sent there any more generous or humane? Indeed, we know of those afflicted having been committed to the care of nurses that we very much doubt any one would for a moment entertain the idea of employing to enter his home. There is no ambulance for transportation, and not sufficient readiness for the care of the first who may be sent to the pest-house. Yet it is certain that it is the part of wisdom in the interests of the community, that small-pox patients should be removed to a hospital distant from human habitation.

The disease is loathsome; its very name is repellent; the title applied to the hospital for it inspires dread; but these are reasons why the authorities should take greater pains to provide in every possible way for the care and treatment of the unfortunate afflicted with the contagion. All communities well able owe it to humanity and to the conservation of the public health to provide, on the outbreak of the epidemic, such a complete, well-appointed small-pox hospital; so well supplied with necessities, comforts and even delicacies, and so officered with nurses of the best character and highest skill and gentlest dispositions, that no one would be disposed to resist the removal of a member of his family afflicted with the disease. A county that is exposed to the risk of the epidemic that is able to bear the expense and that does not thus provide in advance for its appearance, is negligent, not only of duty to its people, but charges the charge that those upon whom the duty devolves are not quick with the common sense human instincts. Fortunately Sacramento county has escaped the pestilence thus far. It may be it will be free from it entirely; it is possible its small-pox hospital is in readiness, and that provision has been made in advance for the best care of the patients who may be taken there at any moment. But in the past we are aware that preparation has been put off until the last moment, and then seldom if ever been adequate. It should not be now, that the reproach every citizen of San Francisco to-day feels, may not attach to the people of this county.

THE HORTICULTURAL VISIT.

The session of the American Horticultural Society, now being held in this State, will have a decided influence for good upon California. The visit of the membership is in the nature of an object lesson. They will see California in its mid-winter, and cannot fail to make a comparison with the Arctic rigors of winter at the East, greatly to our benefit.

They will haveocular proof of the weather. To the transfer Italy acknowledges the error made and graciously admits that her neighbor had cause for anger. This amicable disposal of the matter will not at all please Germany or Austria. Both had reason to fear the spark of ill feeling to a name.

EXPRESSIONS OF THE PRESS.

All disputes between employers and employees ought to be arbitrated, and ninety out of a hundred could be settled in this way. The rule is to strike first and provide arbitration afterwards.—S. F. Stock Report.

High license is everywhere coming to be recognized as the best means of dealing with the liquor traffic in the cities and towns. It is not possible to find places to abolish the traffic, but it is possible to greatly restrict it and make it a large proportion of the burden it creates for the people.—Los Angeles Express.

Is he a traitor because he desires to see another traitor buried? Is he a labor protected? If so the framers of the Democratic platform were traitors. Mr. Randall is a greater man than any his brother, and he is the only one who at his death was interred by his sister, who resides in Maryland. The Commissioners requested her to lead the casket to the State, which she declined to do, and did not even stand at the grave. The Commissioners had the honor of placing the granite slab over his remains, and the stone is a small-vineyard, and around its base, was the vine that grew in the garden of his home in Maryland.

The birthday reception given at Los Angeles to General John C. Fremont, on Saturday, was a fitting tribute to one of the pioneer men of the West. It took the form of a public reception, and a popular one in the true sense, and none have been very gratifying to "The Pathfinder."
